Historic Timeline

Preface

Although incorporated in January 1979, by the Trustees of the Library, and a board of directors named in June of that year, the Friends of The Ferguson Library, Inc., was not announced in the press until April, 1980. By then a membership drive was well underway and the Book and Author Luncheon was to be The Friends' first major program.

The information for this historic timeline has been taken from the minutes of the meetings of the Board of Directors. While ten meetings are scheduled each fiscal year, included herein are only those meetings during which decisions having a long-term impact were made.

At times the origin of a program can be traced from the time the idea was first proposed such as Adopt-A-Book, the Book Store and the Literary Competition. Other programs appear in the minutes only after having been "in the works" for some time. For example, the Staff Development Fund was already established by a grant made to the Library when the Friends voted to add money to it in 1983. We later took over funding responsibility for the entire program. A program's demise, however, is not always recorded -- Literary Lions, for instance, just disappears from the minutes.

Some disparities are apparent. For instance, the method of counting membership has varied over the years and did not become consistent until our records were computerized.

This abbreviated timeline is written as an introduction to the Friends for new members of the Board of Directors. A more complete version is in the History binder and even greater detail can be obtained from the actual minutes of the meetings. All the binders are filed in the Friends office.

Foreword

How the Friends were Founded

In writing for one of our early (1988) newsletters, our first president, June Fahey, wondered where the concept of Library Friends originated. She found that according to Friends of the Library Handbook, Sir Thomas Bodley, a diplomat under Queen Elizabeth I of England, formed a library for Oxford University. He inspired some of his “honorable friends” to donate books thus forming the concept of library benefaction. Many of our libraries today, including the Ferguson, were started by private individuals. The formation of “friends” for public libraries is fairly new (among the earliest to involve an entire community was Detroit in 1942).

According to Marie Hurley, a long-time director of the Ferguson Library, several attempts were made to establish such a group in Stamford, but the time never seemed right. It wasn't until 1977 when plans were being made for an addition to the building that a proposal was made to a reluctant Library Board of Trustees. With the encouragement of the new director, Ernest DiMattia, the Trustees agreed to appoint a committee to look into the feasibility of establishing a Friends organization.

The committee discovered that Friends groups varied according to community: Some merely straightened books on library shelves, others as was the case in Greenwich owned the library building. After a great deal of thought the Trustees decided the primary purpose of the Stamford organization would be “to encourage and promote community participation and involvement in the activities of the Ferguson Library” and signed incorporation papers on January 15, 1979. The first official “Friend” was attorney Sam Cross who drew up our By-Laws.

And the rest, as they say, is history.
